3. PRESENTATION

A) 2017 Year-End Address

Presenter: His Worship, Mayor Derek R. Corrigan

His Worship, Mayor Derek R. Corrigan delivered the following 2017 Year-End Address:

“In October, you may recall that our City Manager, Lambert Chu, presented Burnaby’s new Corporate Strategic Plan to City Council, and highlighted a number of the policies and initiatives that the City will advance, driven by the Plan’s vision, goals and objectives.

Tonight, I’d like to talk a bit about one of the key City structures that ensures the views of our citizens, non-profits and businesses are always well represented - our City’s Committees - which are responsible for bringing forward to Council recommendations on almost all areas of City activities.

At every Council meeting, Councillors bring forward recommendations and progress reports from the Committees. Of course, we see the Councillors here at Council meetings each week, but between Council meetings, Councillors work closely with Committee members to formulate ideas that eventually shape City policies.

It's one of the key ways that citizens are involved in policy decisions from the outset and ensures that they remain involved throughout each stage of policy development.

Citizens and organizations bring forward ideas to our Committees, our Parks, Recreation and Culture Commission, and our Public Library Board for the consideration of staff, Councillors and citizen members. Because of this interaction, we've had tremendous success in forming the kinds of progressive and inclusive policies that create the welcoming, vibrant, sustainable neighbourhoods that make up Burnaby today. Our policies and plans are citizen-driven, which makes us confident that the actions that they generate will be embraced by our community.

In addition to having citizens as Committee members, Burnaby has engaged community members - by the thousands - in developing our overarching strategies: our Economic Development, Social Sustainability, Environmental Sustainability strategies and Official Community Plan.

Our Standing and Steering Committees were set up to enable people from all walks of life to bring ideas forward directly to staff and Council members, to deliberate with them, to hear the ideas and opinions of their peers, then to take them forward for Council for consideration and action.

Because of our Committee system, all of our City's most valued assets and attributes have been developed based on citizen input. By the time an idea is brought to Council, it has already been subject to extensive debate and comprehensive community discussion. This allows us to move forward on initiatives with confidence that we're doing so based on our community's vision, values and goals.

Of the hundreds of ideas and initiatives that have been incubated in our Committees, I'd like to mention just a few tonight that will illustrate the kind of important work that goes on before the ideas even arrive to Council for a vote.

One of our newest Committees - the Sustainable City Advisory Committee, which advises Council on policy issues related to the City's social, economic and environmental plans - put forward an idea to Council a few weeks ago ... the need for an electric vehicle policy. After looking at our goals on greenhouse gas reduction, the Committee recommended that advancing such a policy could help us to meet those aspirations. Council agreed and work on an electric vehicle strategy is now under way.

This Committee - which has Councillor Dhaliwal as Chair, and Councillors Calendino, Volkow and Wang as members, was formed this year, after completion of the City's trilogy of sustainability plans.

In September, through community consultation, this Committee also adopted a draft Dementia-Friendly Community Action Plan, which will help to meet the Social Sustainability Strategy's broad goals of community inclusion, community liveability and community resilience. It also supports Burnaby's ongoing age-friendly initiatives and the health and wellness objectives of the Burnaby Healthier Community Partnership.

The ideas that come from our Parks, Recreation and Culture Commission can be seen throughout the City at all times, including the work currently underway on both the new Central Park Perimeter Trail, and the Willingdon Linear Park, a beautiful and unique multi-use green space linking the new Brentwood to the Heights. And our much-loved Edmonds Community Centre and adjacent park were designed according to what people in the neighbourhood told us would best serve their needs. Now our new ice rinks in the Edmonds area are being designed based on citizen input. The Commission is chaired by Councillor McDonnell, with Councillor Johnston as a member.

And because of the great work of our Financial Management Committee, who is always looking for - and finding - innovative ways to meet our citizens' aspirations with minimum impact on taxpayers, we will be able to design and construct this new sports facility using funds received from developers in the City, with no impact on taxpayers. The Committee, chaired by Councillor Johnston, with Councillor Jordan as Vice-Chair and Councillors Calendino and McDonnell as members, brought forward this proposal in October.

Our Committees make a point of getting out into the community, for their meetings and for additional engagement. They are transparent and allow for direct citizen access, which helps us to design our programs to reflect our City's diversity. Parks Commission meetings, for example, are often held at community centres throughout the City and they always have an open mike at the end of each meeting.

We are a uniquely accessible Council because of our committee structure - because in addition to engaging at Council meetings, citizens can and do bring forward ideas to all of our Committees, Boards and Commissions in all areas of our City throughout each year.

The work of our Community Heritage Commission - which is chaired by Councillor Jordan, with Councillor Dhaliwal as Vice-Chair and Councillor Volkow as a member - can also be seen throughout Burnaby, as they continue to focus on bringing our City's history to life. From citizen responses, we know that our community wants easy access to history, so you can now go online and search Council minutes and reports from 1894 to present day. We are adding to our digital records every day, and oral histories are also accessible online.

And, of course, in many areas of Burnaby there are sites that honour citizens and businesses that helped build our City. Just this year, as part of our Burnaby 125/Canada 150 celebrations, we added many new commemorative plaques, including one that recognizes workers involved in the 1931 Barnet Lumber Company Mill Workers Strike, and another for those who lost their lives in the 1909 Great Northern Railway disaster. Kapoor Singh Siddoo, a pioneer Indo-Canadian Sikh, who founded the Kapoor Sawmills Ltd. and used his success to advocate for civil liberties for the Southeast Asian community in British Columbia, is also honoured.

Also working closely every day with community members is our Public Library Board. Councillor Calendino is the Council representative. The Board includes eight citizens who help keep our libraries responsive and relevant to our citizens' needs at all times. With direction from the Board, we have seen a new emphasis on digital technologies, an ongoing focus on the provision of multi-language reading materials, and the hosting of dozens of community-building events and programs, such as the popular summer reading club. Citizen board members participate as volunteers because they care about the community and are committed to ensuring that our Burnaby libraries remain the valuable assets they have always been. Often, for newcomers to Burnaby, it is in our libraries that they first learn about their new City and the resources available to them.

Another Committee focused on providing important community resources is our Public Safety Committee, which replaced the Community Policing Committee to look more broadly at safety, including policing, fire, and emergency planning. This Committee works closely with all relevant agencies to maximize community involvement and public safety. Just recently, they directed the implementation of several new safety measures to address traffic safety concerns at Canada Way and Rayside.

Community Policing Advisory Committees in each of Burnaby's four community policing districts operate as sub-committees of the Public Safety Committee. These provide additional opportunities for individual citizens, organizations and businesses to give direct input into the development of policing priorities and to identify opportunities to enhance public safety.

One of our busiest Committees is our Planning and Development Committee, chaired by Councillor Jordan, with Councillor Johnston as Vice-Chair and Councillors Dhaliwal, McDonell and Wang as members. The Planning and Development Committee advises Council on transportation planning, affordable housing, City land leasing for non-market and special needs housing, planning issues for residential land use and the implications of federal and provincial policies on these topics. A key area of focus is the creation of initiatives that will help to address the high cost of housing for Burnaby citizens. Their work has led to many new proposals and partnerships that will help thousands of people in our City.

One of the Committee's most recent successes is the partnership that will see a new, 14-storey apartment built in Metrotown that will have 125 non-market units. The project is a partnership between New Vista, B.C. Housing and Thind Properties, with B.C. Housing committing up to $9.1 million and the City offering $5.6 million of density bonus funding received from developers. We're very excited about this project and hope that it will be a model for other development. Construction is expected to start in May.

Our International Relations and Friendship Cities Committee focuses on linking Burnaby citizens and businesses to the valuable cultural and business opportunities beyond our borders. This Committee is chaired by Councillor Calendino, with Councillor Wang as Vice-Chair and Councillor McDonell as a member. This Committee allows citizens to reach well beyond our cities borders to learn from and work with representatives from our sister cities and our friendship cities. We have relationships with cities in China, Korea, Taiwan, Japan and the USA.

The Committee assists Burnaby citizens and businesses to participate in projects and exchanges that promote cultural awareness, joint learning opportunities, and trade and economic development.

I hope that hearing about the great work being done by our Committees will encourage more citizens to get involved in our Committees, either by presenting at meetings or becoming a Committee member. It's another great way to get more involved in helping to shape our City - and, for some citizens, it's a first step toward being even more interested in civic government. Many of our City Councillors over the years started their careers by becoming involved with a City Committee!

As you can see, committee work is critical to policy development here in Burnaby. I'd like to thank our Councillors and staff for their ongoing commitment to maximizing opportunities for public engagement. And I'd like to thank the thousands of citizens who have chosen to contribute their ideas and energy to our Committees and broader consultation processes over the past year – and throughout the all of Burnaby's 125 years. Your work continues to make Burnaby an ever better city. Council looks forward to continuing to work with you to achieve our City's ambitious, but achievable, dreams.

Thank you to everyone here with us tonight, those watching over the internet and those who follow our website."
